Living on the west coast offers a lifestyle of challenging activities and explorations. Academic challenges began at Simon Fraser University where Faye attained a Bachelor of Arts. She was granted a Master of Arts and Doctor of Philosophy from the University of British Columbia. While pursuing the latter degrees Faye was a researcher for Forensic Psychiatric Services and InfoWest Consultants.

Other challenges transpired after graduation when Faye provided services to correctional institutions and community facilities, including clinical supervision individually and in groups. Later, she trained staff regionally and nationally. At a sovereign Coast Salish First Nation, Faye provided counselling, consultations, and facilitated groups. Faye worked with children and families within their community and culture.

Now, Faye is enthusiastic about her private practice and exploring the west coast.
