I have worked extensively in the counselling field since 1985, in a broad range of areas and have provided clinical supervision to more than 70 practitioners since 2006. I love my work in this field, and one of my favourite things is working with other counsellors to help them develop their own individual approaches and grow in their work. I am an adjunct instructor with City University and a former adjunct with the University of Victoria. I have served on BCACC's Inquiry Committee as well as numerous other committees for protecting standards of practice or developing respectful and effective ways of helping. I'm passionate about this work and am always striving to improve our ways of understanding and helping people. I look forward to meeting you.
