I have worked in the mental health field since 2000 in a variety of capacities from grassroots perspectives to attaining the ACS in 2024. My personal counselling practice is rooted in J. Herman's feminist trauma framework and V. Frankl's logotherapy; with safety and stability, healing work can become grounded in our core values, leading to the development of wisdom, social advocacy or becoming an elder.

As the field of counselling is always growing and shifting as we learn new elements of what it is to be human; I believe clinical supervision must encourage this growth in individual therapists as well. In exploring the intersection of individual work, case management and practice development clinical supervision can be the safe place to explore what we want to develop in ourselves as practitioners.

I work with individuals to encourage and support the development of their own professional identity rooted in their unique set of professional values, core beliefs about human & societal development, theoretical practice guidelines and practical actions.
