I have 30 years of experience as a mental health counsellor and have served clients in schools, agencies and in private practice. I completed my Counselling Supervision course in 2018 and have been supervising practicum students during their graduate programs, and then helping them get launched into their new careers. I have worked in the role of clinical supervisor at an agency in Nanaimo, which served families and youth, and each of the practitioners met with me weekly to review their cases and consult about any personal and/or professional challenges as they related to their work.

Since 2022, I have been in private practice and have worked predominantly online with a wide variety of individual supervisees and two groups of three. My approach is person-centred and trauma-focused with a great respect for somatic awareness. I believe that supervision provides a companionship with the clinician in their practice and, although it can highlight some areas in need of improvement, my goal is strength-based and focused on journeying with the clinician to help them provide consistent and compassionate care for their clients.
